Tech Tip — OF THE MONTH — BUFFING TECHNIQUES

Truth is, buffing is not that complicated of a process. The use of proper buffing arbor speeds and the correct abrasive compounds for each metal will significantly effect the shine outcome and surface protection.

KEY TAKEAWAYS

- Buff using underside of the pad and in the direction of pad rotation. This will prevent flying compound or debris.
- Use the correct arbor speed, too much creates heat resulting in "flow lines" - too slow results in a low quality finish.
- Taking time and using patience is key to a perfect end result!
- Pay attention to surface feet per min (sf/min) using (sf/min) this formula: $1/4 \times \text{pad diameter} \times \text{arbor speed} = \text{surface feet per minute}$

ALUMINUM SURFACES

Aluminum is a soft metal that requires careful attention to surface feet per min. 4500-5000 sf/min is recommended.

Step 1: Sand with 240 grit to start, then 320, 300, 600, and finally 800.

Step 2: Buff with a "cutting" buffing pad and a tripoli compound (brown). Use a yellow 6", 8", or 10" airway pad.

Step 3: Buff with a finishing buffing pad and white compound. Use a medium airway pad in standard, ruffle, or pleated construction.

Step 4: (Optional) Buff with an extra soft buffing pad and ultra white compound. Use either Donet or Canton flannel airway pad for the highest shine.

STAINLESS STEEL SURFACES

Stainless steel is a hard ferrous metal that requires faster sf/min and more buffing heat than aluminum. 8000 sf/min is recommended.

Step 1: Sand with 240, 320, 400, and 600 grit.

Step 2: Buff with a cutting pad and emery compound. Use an 8" or 10" blue/purple airway pad. For extra heavy cut, use Busch purple pleated pads.

Step 3: Buff with "finishing" pad and green compound. Use an 8" or 10" medium airway in standard, ruffle or pleated construction.

Step 4: (Optional) Buff with Canton flannel airway pad and ultra green compound for the highest shine.
